NAN OF THE NORTH

SYNOPSIS:

"The Ride For Life"

EPISODE NO. 11

Nan and Igloo, the witch doctor, are senseless on the floor of the trading post, overcome by the deadly fumes emanating from the broken bottles of titano. But, with his last ounce of strength, Igloo manages to pull Nan to an open window and gets her outside.

The silhouetted form of Driscoll has been fired upon by Hays from outside. But this silhouette is only a dummy, erected as a ruse by Driscoll, who now goes down stairs with Gaspard to investigate the noise below. Both are quickly overcome by the fumes from the broken vials.

Hays and his men descend to Driscoll's room, there discover the trick played upon them, and coming down stairs, see the broken bottles. As a last hope, Hays removes the police uniform from the unconscious Driscoll, deciding in the morning to pose as an officer, place Driscoll under arrest and in some way force him to disclose the formula of titano.

Driscoll, Gaspard and Nan become fully revived, but can now do nothing more until morning, when Driscoll determines to capture Hays, recover his uniform, and with it the two precious vials concealed in a secret pocket.

Hays, however, obtains a policeman, and coming to the trading post, places Nan and Gaspard under arrest. Driscoll has left to obtain aid in capturing Hays.

Vane and Peralo are captured by others of the bandits, but as they see Driscoll riding by, offer the two men a chance to win the gratitude of Hays by assisting in capturing Driscoll. Vane and Peralo agree to this, and Driscoll is quickly made a captive.

Nan and Gaspard are placed in a cell, and Hays joins the others of his band. Finding that Driscoll is in his power, he ties him to a saw in a saw mill, threatening him with a terrible death if he does not disclose the formula of titano. But Driscoll refuses.

Igloo, who has been keenly watching, now hurries to the prison and there forces the guard to release Nan. Igloo tells Nan of Driscoll's peril, and advises that she ride to the barracks at once for aid.

As protection against being recognized by the outlaws, Nan obtains the uniform of the police guard and then hastens frantically for the barracks.

Driscoll, refusing to divulge the formula of titano to Hays, is being drawn nearer and nearer to the hideous teeth of the revolving saw, with Nan leading a squad of mounted policemen, as the chapter ends.
